25 years of conservation on the Oregon Coast

Annual Report 2011
The year North Coast Land Conservancy was founded, I was in third grade—and now I have a son who will soon be school age himself. NCLC founder Neal Maine was a father back then; now he’s also a grandfather and great-grandfather. We just finished celebrating the land trust’s 25th year: the quarter-century mark, a significant milestone. But what strikes me even more about that number is that it represents a generation. Our work is about the future; very rarely do we see an instant response to our work, an instant success with our projects. We have now been around long enough to span generations, long enough to really start seeing the difference that we are making to ensure an Oregon coast where healthy communities of people, plants and wildlife all thrive.

Twenty-five years ago there was no land in private conservation on the North Coast; today, after just one generation, there are nearly three thousand acres conserved. Children have grown up to adulthood in a community that has a local land trust and, in their minds, always has had one. Conservation has become part of the North Coast landscape, part of our community’s DNA. But NCLC’s local conservation work is about so much more than acreage. It is about place, identity, and a land ethic that not only supports current residents’ ability to live a full life and enjoy this spectacular coastline, but encourages residents and visitors alike to treat this place with the reverence and respect that will allow those who follow us to experience the same sense of awe.

Successful partnerships between people and wildlife and their habitats were once the hallmark of a healthy culture. We’ve veered from that course for several generations, profoundly altering the landscape along the way. Now that idea is regaining its former shine. I want to thank you for your thoughtful support of conservation and stewardship during this past generation and look forward to partnering with you into the future. It’s an honor to serve you as part of the second-generations of leadership at NCLC.

Thank you for helping us celebrate our 25th Anniversary!

In June of 2011 NCLC hosted six celebrations in six North Coast communities to mark our 25th anniversary as an Oregon land trust. Community members from Astoria, Warreton, Gearhart, Seaside, Cannon Beach and Nehalem all helped NCLC to celebrate this milestone in style, and to reaffirm with us our commitment to protecting this beautiful coast that we all share and love.

You–our community of supporters–are the reason we continue to exist to do this work—Thank You!

Thank you for making it possible for NCLC to help grow a new generation of land stewards

NCLC was fortunate to have three dynamic young people work with us on essential stewardship projects. Land Steward Austin Tomlinson, and stewardship interns Markus Virta and Regina Southworth brought so much energy and enthusiasm to our work. We are inspired by their dedication, and wish them all the best in the future!
2011 ended on a high note for North Coast Land Conservancy—NCLC staff finalized the acquisition of two very special properties at the end of December. It took years of patient work to ensure that these two very different but equally significant properties would be conserved forever. Thank you for supporting NCLC as we worked to make these acquisitions happen—we couldn’t do it without you!

There probably aren’t too many people out there who would be excited to own a virtually impenetrable swamp, but NCLC was thrilled at the opportunity. This donation of land from Clatsop County—40 acres along Sand Creek in Warrenton—adds to the 31 adjoining acres NCLC already holds in conservation there. Sand Creek Wetlands contains a significant amount of globally rare Sitka spruce swamp as well as a host of other native wetland plants.

The opportunity to protect biodiversity and wildlife habitat in this part of the Lower Columbia River Estuary is something we are excited to participate in. Thanks to Clatsop County for making this possible, and to the community of Warrenton for their support.

Thank you to
Clatsop County, Craft3, the Minikseski Family Fund of the Oregon Community Foundation and the Walter T Haswell III Wild Environment Fund of the Vanguard Charitable Endowment Program for making these acquisitions possible.

After four years spent working with four different landowners, NCLC was pleased to finally acquire our latest habitat reserve, the North Fork Necanicum. These 40 acres of North Coast forest—including a quarter mile of both sides of the Necanicum River—thrive with biodiversity and healthy forest structure. Long undisturbed forest combined with a dynamic river channel has created key habitat for spawning coastal coho, chinook salmon, and steelhead trout.

Huge Bigleaf maple trees, nurse logs, second-growth Sitka spruce trees, salmon habitat—this new habitat reserve is as good as we’ve ever seen on the North Coast. Thank you for helping us to protect this beautiful forest forever!

OSU Extension Forester Glen Ahrens marvels at the huge Big leaf maple tree at the heart of the North Fork Necanicum Habitat Reserve.
Thank you for taking the time to marvel with us at how amazing nature can be.

Could there be anything better to do on a summer day than spend time exploring nature? We had so much fun with the great group of people who came out for Mill Ponds Adventure Day in 2011! Young or old, everyone grabbed a dip net and set out to discover what kind of creatures were living in the Seaside Mill Ponds.

Thanks to our great volunteers for making this event happen, and thanks to everyone who came out to explore with us!

...and Thanks for helping us put all the frogs and fish safely back in the Seaside Mill Ponds!

Thank you for providing a path of stewardship for a new generation.

This year NCLC had the opportunity to work with a new local youth crew from Tillamook, the Tillamook Options Program School (TOPS) Oregon Coast Youth Corps.

Never have I worked with such a professional youth crew! The students worked hard, showed initiative, used their creativity and team work to tackle challenges in the field, and all the while had a great time getting all the work done.

If it wasn’t for the TOPS crew, NCLC would never have been able to complete our restoration work on the scale that was accomplished this year.

Many thanks to this great group of young Oregonians, and to their coordinator Shiras Stamps-White for helping NCLC achieve so much.

Celeste Coulter
NCLC Stewardship Director

Thanks for helping us get rid of all those invasive plants!
Throughout 2011 more than 100 community volunteers and 3 youth corps crews helped NCLC plant well over 10,000 native trees and shrubs, build 3,000 feet of fencing, remove thousands of invasive plants from 200 acres of land and reclaim 12 bags of trash from NCLC properties located from Nehalem Bay all the way to the Columbia River.

Regina Southworth and Markus Virta traversed 8 swamps, and explored 5 miles of creeks and lakes. Mike and Michele Patterson and Steve Warner set up and monitored a bird banding station at NCLC’s Stanley Marsh, banding 179 birds and counting 28 different species. Art Limbird monitored wells at Stanley Marsh for 33 weeks, documenting the rise and fall of ground water throughout the year. Penny and Jay Paulsen completed four quarterly site visits for the first time ever on an NCLC property.

Thanks to our great volunteers, NCLC is able to achieve key stewardship goals and learn more about the biodiversity and ecology of the lands that we hold in conservation.

Thank you for helping NCLC accomplish so much on the ground this year.

Thank you for showing up to help, rain or shine!

Thank you for giving NCLC the gift of your time

We couldn’t do it without you!
In 2011 North Coast Land Conservancy joined together with seventeen other Oregon land trusts to form the Coalition of Oregon Land Trusts (COLT), a new organization to provide a collective voice for the land conservation movement in Oregon. The mission of COLT is to “serve and strengthen the land trust community in Oregon.”

“I had the great honor of serving on the founding executive board for COLT, which allowed me to feel truly connected to all of the great conservation work happening around the state,” remarked NCLC Executive Director Katie Voelke. “NCLC will be able to accomplish more on the ground if we work together with our greater Oregon land trust community. The forming of COLT is the beginning of a strategic approach to conservation and stewardship, not only in our coastal area, but across the state.”

Throughout the United States, land trusts have conserved close to 37 million acres of land, an area equal to the size of New England. In Oregon, conserved landscapes are found from the coast to the crest of the Cascades and from the lush Willamette Valley east to the expansive high desert. Oregon land trusts protect these areas as nature preserves, forests, wetlands, scenic views, working farms and public parks, making key connections in the Oregon landscape for the benefit of all Oregonians.

We look forward to working with COLT, and to the exciting possibilities that this partnership will bring.

NCLC volunteers spent hundreds of hours helping us stuff envelopes, send thank-you letters and cards, track grants, organize files, package notecards, host events and accomplish a whole lot of operational tasks that kept us moving forward in 2011.

Thank you for supporting conservation in the State of Oregon

Thank you for 25 years of volunteering with NCLC!

Founding NCLC board member Doug Ray was honored at the end of 2011 with NCLC’s Lifetime Achievement award.

Doug has a gift for inspiring others to connect with the wonder and beauty of the Oregon Coast landscape. As a tireless volunteer he has bravely attended countless meetings, stuffed many envelopes, planted thousands of trees and shrubs on NCLC lands, and led multiple excursions for the land trust, including the easement monitoring on Onion Peak pictured here. His love of the Oregon Coast is a gift to us all—NCLC is fortunate that he shares his passion to help us benefit nature. Thanks Doug!

Bald eagles and peregrine falcons, green herons and great blue herons, cedar waxwings and Townsend’s warblers, goldeneyes and buffleheads, river otters and beavers: for years, Colleen Chandler has kept a record of the birds and mammals living in or passing through her own creekside property at the base of Tillamook Head, near the Cove in Seaside, as well as the adjacent undeveloped lot. She couldn’t bear the thought of someone buying that lot, filling the wetland, and building a house—so she bought it herself. Late last year she named NCLC as the recipient of that land in her living will, giving her confidence that the property will continue to serve as a vital wildlife corridor in perpetuity. “I’ll maintain it in the meantime,” she says. “It’s just worth keeping.”

The quarter-acre lot at the edge of town is “small in area but big in impact,” says NCLC director Katie Voelke. Located just a quarter mile north of NCLC’s Circle Creek Habitat Reserve, the property serves as a link between Circle Creek and other conserved lands on and around Tillamook Head as well as the ocean, less than 100 yards away.

Chandler is a lifelong birder and a champion of wild animals, which helps explain her motivation to preserve the pocket of land on what she and her neighbors call Rose Creek. But conservation, she says, is essential for people too. When her late husband was ill and nearing the end of his life, she used to take him out to the Clatsop Plains to watch the elk move across NCLC’s conserved lands at Reed Ranch. At times like that, she reflects, “nature is what you need.”
Thank you so much for your support!
